8 Things You'll Want to Instagram During Miami Art Week

DECEMBER 4, 2017 12:11 PM

by PATRICIA GARCIA

Although Art Basel Miami Beach doesn't officially begin until December 7, this Monday unofficially kicks off what is now known as Miami Art Week, a cultural bonanza that takes over the city every December. Aside from hitting the major fairs (Art Basel and Design Miami) and the smaller satellite ones (NADA, Scope, and Untitled), there's so much art and assorted excitement to see—and to share on Instagram. From a mirrored maze that rivals any Kusama exhibition to a giant inflatable castle made of Kanye West's face, here are eight things that will surely take over your feed during Miami Art Week.

Female Artists Taking on the Patriarchy at Fair.

With the #MeToo movement taking over the national dialogue, and last month's high-profile firings of the director of the Armory Show and the publisher of Artforum after allegations of sexual harassment, women in the art world are rightfully taking center stage at Basel. Perhaps one of the most anticipated projects of this season is Fair., an all-female, noncommercial art fair curated by Zoe Lukov and Anthony Spinello that will tackle issues of gender inequality, fair wage, and women's empowerment at Brickell City Centre, a sprawling open-air shopping center in downtown Miami. On the agenda: massive billboards by female collective Guerrilla Girls; Yoko Ono's Wish Tree, a collaborative performance piece where visitors tie their wishes to a tree branch; and Jillian Mayer's Impressions, a huge installation that comments on marketing tactics used on women.

December 7–10 at Brickell City Centre; free admission

Björk Deejaing at Mana Wynwood

Fresh off the release of her 10th studio album, Utopia, Björk will be performing for the first time ever in Florida. As part of the III Points annual Art Basel concert series (which has hosted performances by FKA twigs and Kendrick Lamar in the past), Björk will be deejaing at Mana Wynwood, a massive, 100,000-square-foot art center. Come to find out what dazzling tricks the experimental artist will have up her sleeve, and stay for what will surely be an esoteric dance set.

December 5 at Mana Wynwood; tickets start at $55

All the Selfies at the Museum of Ice Cream

Sure, the pink-saturated walls at the pop-up Museum of Ice Cream might seem a little gimmicky, but, come on, don't pretend you aren't a little curious to dive into that sprinkle pool. It opens in Miami just in time for Basel, and presale tickets for the adult playground are already sold out, but there are still some available (at a steeper price) during Art Basel week. Hey, if it's cool enough for Beyoncé, then it's cool enough for you.

December 6–11 at Faena District, 3400 Collins Avenue

Prada and Carsten Höller Making Art Out of a Nightclub

The top contender for this year's most exclusive door at Miami Art Week goes to the Prada Double Club, a nightclub-meets-art installation concept by artist Carsten Höller and Fondazione Prada. Taking over an old 1920s film studio, the Prada Double Club will offer late-night revelers two different atmospheres in which to mingle and explore: a monochromatic club space indoors and a hyper-polychromatic tropical garden outdoors. Höller has stated his goal is to create a "schizophrenic journey" for guests—what sounds more 'grammable than that?

Open to select guests December 5–7 at 71 NW 14th Street

New Spring by Swine Studio

The Mystical Bubbles at COS's New Spring

Earlier this year at Milan's Salone del Mobile, minimalist fashion label COS debuted an interactive installation called New Spring by Studio Swine, a design duo made up of Japanese architect Azusa Murakami and British artist Alexander Groves. The towering, chandelier-like sculpture blows mist-filled globes onto visitors from dangling light fixtures above. The piece was a favorite at the Italian design fair and is poised to be a hit in Miami, too.

Opens December 5, 1415 Euclid Avenue

Room 2022 by Es Devlin

Es Devlin's Mirrored Maze at the Edition Hotel

Es Devlin, the visionary behind Kanye West's Life of Pablo flying stage and Beyoncé's "Formation" visual cube sculpture, is debuting a new site-specific art installation at Miami Beach's Edition Hotel. Devlin's Room 2022, powered by American Express Platinum, will span over 7,000 square feet and take visitors through a psychedelic journey that features color-saturated corridors, trick doors, and a vaulted elliptical mirror maze. Think: Yayoi Kusama meets The Shining.

Open select hours December 7–10; special access for American Express Platinum members.

Goop's Millennial Pink Gift Shop

For those who might need a little retail therapy to counter all that art and partying, Goop has set up its Goop Gift pop-up shop in the middle of the Design District. Gifts are conveniently divided by personality—the hostess, the health nut, the guy's guy—to help art week-goers squeeze in some holiday shopping. Also on hand? Goop's signature health and wellness products, including Moon Juice dusts, Goop vitamin packs, and, who knows, maybe those jade eggs everyone is talking about will be there, too?

Open until December 24, 151 NE 41st Street, Suite 127

Happy Kanye West

It's rare to ever catch Kanye West smiling—just peruse @KanyeDoingThings to get an idea. But Miami visitors will have the opportunity to see a 20-foot inflatable bouncy castle of West with a massive grin on his face at Basel House Mural Festival in Wynwood. Created by Barcelona-based artist collective Hungry Castle, #HappyKanye was inspired by the infamous Sad Kanye meme that once made fun of the rapper pouting in the background of a vacation photo with his wife, Kim Kardashian West. Guests are encouraged to climb into the inflatable work of art and stroke Kanye's "ego"—not like he needs any help in that department.

December 8–10 at Basel House Mural Festival, Wynwood.
