

Want to Shop for a Cause? These 8 Benefit Sales Enable You to Give the Gift of Art This Holiday Season While Doing Good

Buy art and benefit organizations like The Kitchen and Art for Black Lives.

Artnet News, December 21, 2020

Art for Black Lives

Kalup Linzy, Breena's DNA (2020). Fine art digital print, Edition of 10 + 3AP. Courtesy Art for Black Lives.

Now in its third edition, the charity Art for Black Lives offers limited-run A4 artist prints by a diverse and intergenerational group of artists. One hundred percent of the proceeds after shipping and production is transferred directly to one of two charities benefiting the Black trans community. Since launching this summer, $53,000 has been raised for these causes, with artists including Nora Turato, Laurie Simmons, Tony Just, and Raymond Pettibon participating by donating works for the project.

Complete sets of artist prints from previous rounds are available (for those who might want a chance at some of works that sold out already). And there are some excellent options available from the most recent iteration, which launched earlier this month. Take LA-based artist Edgar Arcenaux's searing new work Rage, which was inspired by an interview with the cast of The Avengers, in which Samuel Jack mistook the word "inward" for the n-word. Proceeds from this round benefit the Frances Thompson Education Foundation.

Dates: Ongoing

Price: Individual works range from $300 to $750. Complete print sets, including 18 artist prints, are $7,000 to $10,000.

—Kate Brown